Argentina

The military government yesterday announced that it has granted 70-year-old former President Hector Campora, who has been in refuge at the Mexican Embassy in Buenos Aires since the military seized power in early 1976, a safe-conduct to leave the country for Mexico today. Campora served only briefly as President in 1973, during which time he released hundreds of leftwing and Peronist supporters from jail and set the stage for Juan Peron to 3.5(c) return from Spain and become Argentina's President once again.

COMMENT: Campora has had cancer in his neck for some time, but the issue of allowing him to leave the country has been hotly debated among military leaders. He becomes the second prominent political prisoner to be released recently--newspaper publisher Jacobo Timerman was allowed to go into exile in late September--and this development is a further sign that President Videla and his likely successor, General Viola, are prevailing over hardliners in the military hierarchy. 3.5(c)
